A typical 3D printer is very much like an inkjet printer operated from a computer. It builds up a 3D model one layer at a time, _____ , by repeatedly printing over the same area in a method known as fused depositional modeling (FDM). Working entirely automatically, the printer creates a model over a period of hours by turning a 3D CAD drawing into lots of two-dimensional, cross-sectional layers—effectively separate 2D prints that sit one on top of another, but without the paper in between.
